	In a split vote, the BOJ set up a programme buying exchange-traded funds at an annual pace of 300 billion yen ($2.45 billion) and said it would extend the average maturity of the bank's government bonds to 7-12 years from the beginning of next year. "This is an expansion but its efficacy is somewhat debatable," said Martin King, co-managing director at Tyton Capital Advisors.
	The BOJ said it would target for its ETF stock purchases firms that are investing in physical and human capital, a move that market players said was aimed at encouraging companies to raise wages and increase capital expenditure.
